

FIGURE 2.6. The curse of dimensionality is well illustrated by a subcubical neighborhood for uniform data in a unit cube. The figure on the right shows the side-length of the subcube needed to capture a fraction  $r$  of the volume of the data, for different dimensions  $p$ . In ten dimensions we need to cover 80% of the range of each coordinate to capture 10% of the data.